In 1980 the Warsaw Old Town was entered in the UNESCO World Heritage List.
It was a sign of appreciation for the unprecedented effort put by the Poles in the reconstruction of this symbol of Polish culture and national identity after the WWII.

Parks

A photograph of a park scene. In the foreground, a stone balustrade with a statue of a seated woman is on the left. A wooden bridge with a dark railing spans a pond. A peacock is perched on the bridge railing. The pond reflects the surrounding trees and sky. In the background, there are more trees, a small stone archway, and a group of people sitting on a grassy bank. The text 'Łazienki Królewskie' is overlaid in green on the right side of the image.

The Roman-inspired amphitheatre

This is the largest park in Warsaw.

The Palace was built in the 17th century and then remodelled in the 18th century for King Stanisław August Poniatowski who made it his residence.

Wilanów

Wilanów Palace was built for the Polish king Jan III Sobieski

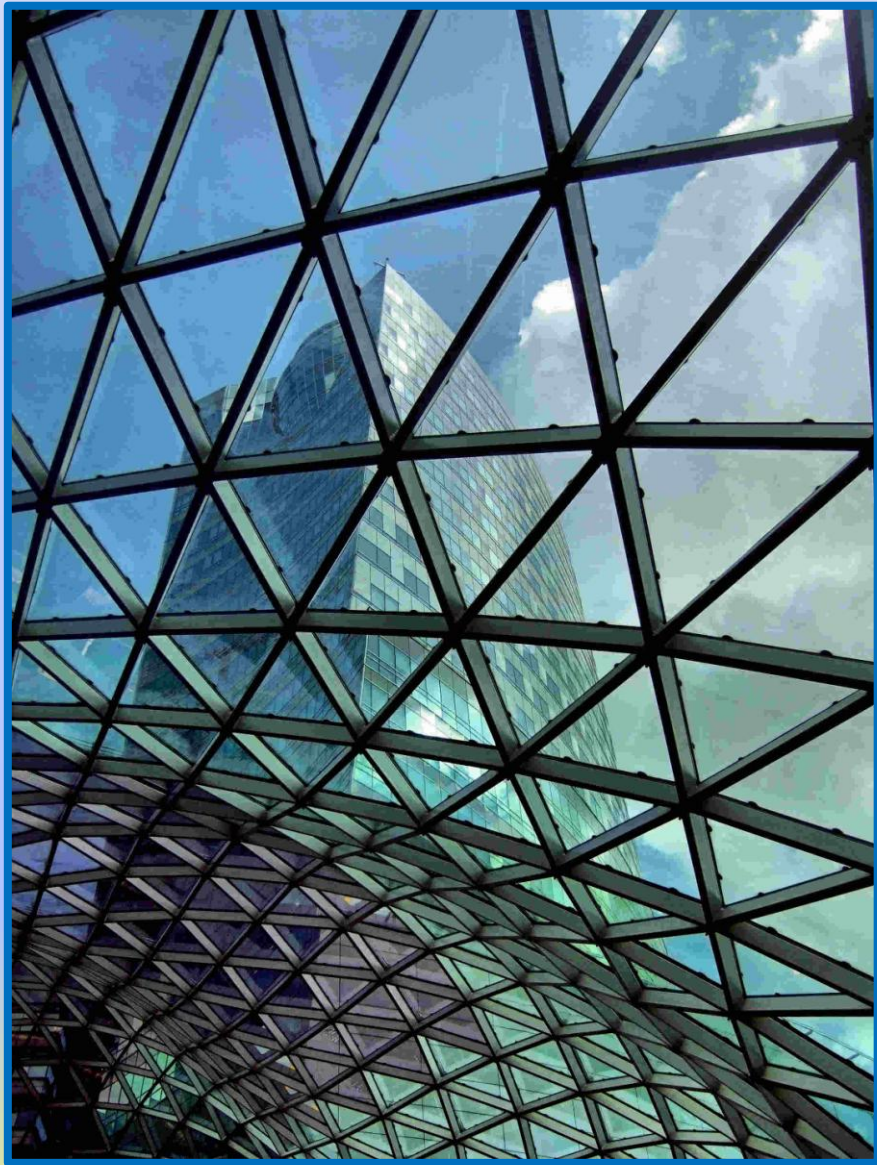

Jan III Sobieski is famous for the victory over the Turks in 1683 (Battle of Vienna).
Following his victories over the Ottoman Empire, he was called by the Turks the "Lion of Lechistan" and held as the saviour of European Christendom
by the pope.
